Maximum Registration: 50

Catalog Description: As a basic course in Inductive Bible Studies, its primary purpose is to enable the student to begin developing an inductive approach to Bible study, especially in the areas of observation and interpretation. Parts of the Gospel of Mark are used to demonstrate and to practice a methodical approach that can be used in other biblical books. Some of the main themes of the Gospel are highlighted in the process.

Objectives:

NT (IBS) 511 Mark

NT (IBS) 511 Mark
Spring Semester 2009
James C. Miller, PhD

Associate Professor of Inductive Biblical Studies and New Testament

I will post a full syllabus on the first day of class. For now, here are the required texts.

Jim

Required Texts:

1. David Thompson. Bible Study That Works. Evangel Press, 1994.
2. Revised Standard Version of the NT (preferred because the text is less cluttered with paragraph headings, etc; NIV, NRSV, TNIV are also OK).
3. ONE of the following contemporary commentaries
 James Edwards. The Gospel According to Mark. Pillar NT Commentary. Eerdmans, 2002.
 Robert Gundry. Mark: A Commentary on His Apology for the Cross. Eerdmans, 1993.
 Morna Hooker. The Gospel According to Mark. Black's NT Commentary. Hendrickson, 1991.
 Eugene Boring. Mark: A Commentary. New Testament Library. Westminster/John Knox

Press, 2006.

4. You will also need access to Joel Green, Scot McKnight, and I. Howard Marshall, eds. Dictionary of Jesus & the Gospels. IVP, 1992. I will require reading from this fairly regularly. I highly recommend buying it for your own library.
